I heard the Crow Scouts call out "the Sioux were coming up the road" so I called to Reno & said they the Sioux were coming & to ~~order~~ order a few men to scout that way & close up. They then crossed over the Little Horn & Reno formed them in line of battle on the prairie just outside ~~some~~ some timber. They formed without halting and we left on trotting at a trot ~~at~~ first and then a gallop. We could see a large body of Indians just ahead ~~of~~ & on our left apparently coming for us. We advanced probably half a mile the Indians firing the timber on our right & front. Some Indians went in the timber and we fired on them but no shots were returned. We then dismounted ~~and the soldiers the~~ and the soldiers formed a skirmish line facing the hills. The line extended to the left and front and firing began 1225 CIVIL WAR: 1862. 108 page manuscript by Civil War general JOHN C. TIDBALL entitled "War Period / 1862" dealing with McClellan's dismissal, Antietam, refitting the army, Jeb Stuart and recrossing the Potomac.

"No reason, that I know of, has ever been made public for the removal of McClellan, but by putting this and that together it is not difficult to see that it was entirely for political reasons flowing from who should succeed Mr. Lincoln to the presidency at the close of his term in 1865. . . . It was necessary to keep a vigilant lookout in this direction to see that no general should gain such popularity as to be dangerous to the political wire-pullers. McClellan had been popular from the start." TIDBALL makes a stout defense of McClellan and points out that his nickname "Little Napoleon" was the result of everyone's admiration of the controversial general.

Also an article taken from a military journal written by TIDBALL with notations and corrections in his hand.

The manuscript was intended for publication, but has remained in TIDBALL'S archives for almost a century. His narrative of Antietam is colorful and exciting as is Jeb Stuart's raid into Pennsylvania.

TIDBALL's letter is a retained copy, signed and entirely in his hand. Both generals knock the role of General James F. Hartranft (later governor of Pennsylvania) in the Battle of Petersburg. TIDBALL relates that President Lincoln "meeting General Hartranft and supposing him to have done all the work, dubbed him there and then a Major General. Hartranft was a politician with high aspirations and his services on this occasion were magnified to the eclipsing of all others."

1233 COLORED CAVALRY IN THE CIVIL WAR. Three documents signed for the Secretary of War (one actually signed by EDWIN M. STANTON) commissioning James S. Brisbin to assume command of various units of colored cavalry. Brisbin had long been interested in recruiting freed slaves into the Union army and particularly the cavalry. Lincoln was personally interested in these plans and encouraged Brisbin to embark upon them. Brisban thus became Colonel of Colored Cavalry and his units fought valiantly in Kentucky, West Virginia and Tennessee.
In a letter to the Adjutant General of the Army, General S.G. Burbridge says of Brisbin: "He has been in the Department since June 1864, and in the short space of nine (9) months has raised, organized and put in the field under my orders nearly twenty thousand colored troops. The enlistment of negroes in this State was a delicate question, yet, General Brisbin has managed the whole question so well as to give general satisfaction, and at the same time accomplish the most astonishing results." General Joseph Hooker in a letter to Stanton said of Brisbin: "He served under me and has been one of the successful Generals of the War, and deservedly so." File copies of letters.

1237 CUSTER'S LAST STAND. Twelve page manuscript, unpublished, dictated by GEORGE HERENDEEN and in the handwriting of General James S. Brisbin. The last page is in HERENDEEN's handwriting and signed by him.
HERENDEEN was assigned by General Alfred Terry to scout for Custer up to the Little Big Horn River so that contact could be maintained between Custer and the forces of Terry, Gibbon and Brisbin. It was hoped at that time that Custer would not try to engage the Indians himself. Brisbin commanded one of the columns that was to converge on the Sioux camp, which has been called the largest assemblage of Indians on the North American continent.

The narrative begins in a question and answer form with HERENDEEN dictating his answers to General Brisbin: "How did you happen to be with Custer - please relate all the circumstances. I was present with Genl. Gibbons command at the Rosebud on the Yellowstone when Genl. Terry told me I could go with Genl. Custer on his march up the Rosebud. He told me at Genl. Gibbon's tent to go with Custer and I afterwards saw Genl. Terry on the Far West while she lay at the mouth of Rose Bud and he asked me about the country along Tullocks Fork." He relates then how he was called into conference with Generals Terry, Custer, Gibbon and Brisbin aboard the Far West. "Custer seemed pleased with what I said about the country to Genl. Terry and said I was just the man he wanted to go with him."

He tells of the march from the 21st of June, 1876. On the 22nd they picked up the Indian trail. On the 24th the trail was very fresh: "Towards evening the trail became so fresh Custer ordered flankers to be kept out and look sharp... Sometime during the night a scout came and reported to Genl. Custer the camp was found. We packed up at once and started, it being early light."

At this point on the morning of the 25th, Custer split his command and sent Reno ahead with the scouts and HERENDEEN. Reno was soon attacked by about 200 Indians and the soldiers took cover in the timber.

"They came into the woods and we concealed our selves, tying the horses to the trees. Just as we got settled down Custer's fight opened up below us. The firing was very heavy and apparently in volleys. I should think there were as many as eight or nine volleys and interchangeable firing was very rapid. The firing lasted about three quarters of an hour and then died away. The number of Indians which attacked Reno could not have exceeded two hundred and he had only one soldier killed at the time he began his retreat. . ."

"I told them that the fight below had stopped and it was a guess how it had terminated, but you thought likely in favor of the Indians and we had better away before they came back there. . . As i came up the hill Reno started down the way Custer went - he did not go more than 1/3 of a mile when the indians drove him Back to his Old stand whare we foat until Dark the next - day the indians opened up at Daylight and Closed at about (4) O'Clock. We had no watter and the sufering was very grate there was (7) men hit in the charge for watter. i think Cap Benteen saved the fight - noboddy new what had cecame of Custer unter Gen Tery came up." As the last page was in HERENDEEN's handwriting, the spelling and grammar was not as polished as General Brisbin's. At the conclusion of page twelve, HERENDEEN has signed the account.

The entire narrative is written in pencil and is very exciting. On the back of one page there is a note referring to the scouts report to Custer which is a little unclear. "Bouyer it the bigest camp he had ever seen and Reynolds there were a heap of them. Custer replied he could whip them and Reynolds said it would take him six hours hard fighting." Bouyer was a half-breed Sioux guide and interpreter.

This is one of the most important reports to come out of the massacre of General George A. Custer and the 7th Cavalry on June 25, 1876. It was probably written immediately after the relief columns arrived. It is unpublished and has been in the archives of General James S. Brisbin for almost a hundred years.

1238 CUSTER'S LAST STAND. 40 page booklet published in 1927 and written by Brigadier General Charles F. Roe who was one of the first white men to arrive on the Custer battlefield. The first page is signed by ELIZABETH BACON CUSTER, widow of the great Indian fighter.

This is one of the most accurate accounts of the great Indian massacre to have been written. Fully illustrated with maps and pictures. It is believed that this was Mrs. Custer's own copy as it came from her family.

1254 (FLORIDA: CIVIL WAR) 67 page manuscript concerning the relief and defense of Fort Pickens in Florida during the early days of the Civil War. Fort Pickens and Fort Sumter were both under Confederate attack when Lincoln became President. President Buchanan had promised the South not to reinforce these two forts and it was Lincoln's first decision and one that precipitated open warfare.

The seige of Fort Pickens is graphically described by JOHN C. TIDBALL, an officer in the expedition and later a brevet major general.

"There were few comforts of any kind, especially in the way of food. We had no fruit or fresh vegetable of any kind. And fortunate was the officer who received invitations to dine with their more favored brothers aboard the navy vessels. ... And many future admirals and commodores received their first lessons of really hard work in the hot glare of the white sandy beach. Among the first vessels to arrive was the Powahatan under Lieutenant, afterwards Admiral Porter."

TIDBALL relates an incident when all officers were required to take the oath of allegiance to the U.S. government again, while under the guns of the Confederacy. One officer refused.

At another point: "Colonel Brown, an excitable man, sent a note to General Bragg demanding an explanation of this singular preceedure of the dry-dock. This offered Bragg an opportunity for writing one his characteristic letters in reply ridiculing the Yankees, as he called us, for being so frightened at an empty floating helplessly on the water."

"While on duty in Washington with General Sherman, as his A.D.C., he one day, about the middle of May 1883, called me into his room at the headquarters office and told me that on the following day he was going to take the British Minister and his family - Sir Sackville West - on a cruise to Hampton Roads and other places on the Chesapeake, using for the purpose the Talapousa or some other navy boat placed at his disposal, and he wanted me during his absence to take care of the legation premises. Without giving me opportunity to make any inquiry as to the object of such an extraordinary proceeding he went on, in his quick nervous style, to say that information had come to the President that owing to the execution of the Phoenix Park, Dublin assassins, one of whom was to be executed within a few days, the Irish agitators threatened to dynamite the British Legation here and possibly assassinate the minister."

TIDBALL describes how he carried out his mission with utmost secrecy as only the President and a few others were aware of situation. Sackville West was later ordered out of the country by President Cleveland for becoming involved in American politics.

1295 (LINCOLN'S FIRST INAUGURAL). 72 page manuscript in the hand of Civil War general JOHN C. TIDBALL entitled "Washington, 1861" and relating the momentous events that took place in the last days of Buchanan's presidency and the beginnings of Lincoln's. TIDBALL rose to the rank of major general by brevet during the war and was Commandant of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.
This is a well written account of the tensions in the nation's capital as the South indicating to us that the next President had presented himself to take the oath of office. This was the supreme moment of anxiety; ~~but~~ presently ~~the~~ all was stillness, ~~and~~ followed a few minutes later by the faint sound of Mr. Lincoln's voice as he delivered his inaugural address. General Scott, then showing the infirmities of age, but still magnificent in physical proportions walked out to the corner of the street ~~for the purpose~~ where he could look in the direction of the inaugural ceremonies. I with some of the other officers ~~and~~ also there. The General was widely anxious. Presently we beheld was withdrawing from the Union by an officer who had just returned from western duty and was stationed in Washington to defend the city and protect the newly elected President, Abraham Lincoln. Described is a reception in the Blue Room of the White House hosted by James Buchanan: "To all outward appearances, the wheels of government were running with their accustomed smoothness. Miss Lane, the hostess of the White House for her old bachelor uncle, Buchanan, held her receptions as usual, and received her guests with that ease and grace for which she was remarkable... and at these the President himself assisted, shaking hands with all who filed past him and smiling with an affected ease that but slightly disguised the anxiety then agitating his timid heart."

TIDBALL described the secrecy with which Lincoln was brought to Washington as many feared an assassination and the precautions taken to protect the President-elect during the Inauguration. He mentions troops being stationed all over Washington: "...from this came to us the sound of applause indicating to us that the new President had presented himself to take the oath of office. This was the supreme moment of anxiety. Presently all was stillness followed a few minutes later by the first sound of Mr. Lincoln's voice as he delivered his inaugural address. ...Presently we beheld an elderly gentleman, tall and gaunt, running with all the vigor that his age permitted down the hill towards us. ...At first we though him a messenger of ill news, but as he approached the general (Scott) he cried out "It is finished! He is President! He is safe!" To which the general replied "Thank God, thank God" and these two old men fell into each others arms and hugged each other with the joy of school-boys. The elderly gentleman who brought such cheering news was no other than Thurlow Weed, the veteran editor who done so much toward building up the cause which Lincoln, as President now represented."

TIDBALL mentions a ceremony at the White House when all the army officers in Washington presented themselves to the new President. Among them were some who achieved fame for both North and South during the war, possibly the last time together as a group. Winfield Scott, Robert E. Lee, Joseph E. Johnston and others crowded in to meet the New President.

This account was prepared by TIDBALL after the war for publication, but it was never published. It is interesting, exciting and well written.

"The General of the Army was merely an advisory function, but when the selection of Commandant came up he insisted that he should come from the artillery and named first one then another officer for the place. But Drum, for some reason or other, objected to both, doing in the meanwhile a good deal of running back and forth to the Secretary."

TIDBALL relates how he then recommended a Captain Hasbrook to General Sherman: "This settled the matter and he was appointed..."

Interesting! . . . . . (65.00)

1364 (WESTERN AMERICANA) 46 page diary (in pencil) of the Whipple Expedition of 1853-54 to the West. Pages measure about 4" x 6" with a worn brown cover. The diary was written by JOHN C. TIDBALL who was later to become a brevet major general in the Civil War. He was a member of the Whipple Expedition and later was Commandant of Cadets at West Point.

TIDBALL has made 8 topigraphical sketches throughout his commentary (see illustration). He was signed the first page "John C. Tidball en route for California." The first entry is dated January 3rd, 1854. His notes are of his travels with minute mileage recorded. The last entry is in late February.

Many passages relate the difficulties of travel with emphasis on natural hazards such as quicksand. Many times mules and wagons were abandoned. "Now with broken down mules 250 miles from relief and upon half rations and not sufficient of them to carry us through, saying nothing of the expense the government is incurring by such unnecessary delays." At this point they had traveled to the region of the Colorado River.

An entry for February 22nd states: "Last night the first Indians came in to us. Very friendly, and today large numbers of them were with us. Many from the other side of the river upon seeing us plunged in and swam over like ducks. They are almost entirely naked wearing nothing but a breech cloth, and are fine large fellows. They loaded themselves down with the plunder we left... But few of them are armed, these that are have bows long arrows with which they shot with surprising accuracy."

Also are large printed volume entitled "Reports of Explorations and Surveys to Ascertain the Most Practicable and Economical Route for a Railroad from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean," printed for the U.S. Senate (Washington: 1856). This is volume III. With a card affixed to the inside front cover: "With the respects of A.W. Whipple / Capt. U.S. Top'l Engineers." TIDBALL has signed in pencil above it. The book is profusely illustrated with many color plates of landscapes, indians and animals. Overall, though, it is in poor condition with covers and bindings loose and several pages cut up. It appears that TIDBALL had cut some pictures out to illustrate a book he was going to write. TIDBALL is mentioned throughout this report.

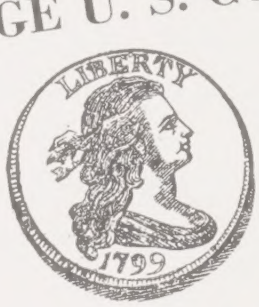
LARGE U. S. COPPER CENTS



Coinage began 1793, discontinued in 1857. None coined in 1815.

The following represent the principal varieties of the Large Copper Cents. There are a large number of minor varieties; for instance, there are over fifty die varieties of the 1794 alone. It is, of course, impossible to keep a complete stock at all times, but I have a large and fine stock, special lists of which are issued from time to time and sent free to my customers.

You will get more value and satisfaction by paying a little more for the better class of coins, especially in large cents.

a pass or low place in the mountains which we followed up and found quite a good road except for about half a mile. This when we got to the top it was concluded could be made practicable for wagons by work. The ascent upon the eastern side was by a very gradual slope. and about a half mile ahead was water. Encamped, upon the mountain by the pass, and sent back a messenger for the wagons to come up.

Two Indians appeared on the side of the mountains this morning near our camp. and after a great deal of parleying were induced to come in. We could not learn much from them, but they
